

"TAMMANY" GIVES HIS BRIDE LAUNDRY AS A WEDDING GIFT

That's Where His Little Romance Began, When He Was Only "2028" in Black Ink.

"Tammany" was married yesterday afternoon. Los Angeles papers please copy. He married "a regular girl," too—his own words—and he gave her a laundry for a wedding present. There could not have been a more fitting gift, either, because the romance of the thing began in this selfsame laundry. In those early days he was not a personality at all, merely "2028"—the number marked on the clothes he sent to the wash.

The soubriquet "Tammany," conferred upon the groom in this chronicle by Col. John A. Cockerill, once managing editor of The World, will identify to many the stocky, black-haired, alert youngster who has been newsboy, office boy on The World, "personal attendant to Col. Cockerill"—his own words again—"secretary and pal" to Paul Armstrong, the playwright, actor, "sporting man," singer—laughter here by "Tammany" himself—moving picture performer and laundry cupid.

But if you want to know him academically, as it were, look at the parish register of St. Michael's and there you will find him inscribed in his own hand as "William F. Young," and on the line below is the entry "Mas Gertrude Savage," and there you have the headlines in the romance—"Tammany" and the little laundry girl.

There were only a few friends of "Tammany" and Miss Savage in the church, but one of them was Jimmie Johnson. Paul Armstrong was to have been there, but he was in Baltimore and couldn't come. Charlie Harvey had to miss it, too, and there were several others who were kept away at the last minute, but "Tammany" was married, at any rate.

"Tammany's" romance began five years ago, when he took some shirts to the West Thirty-sixth street laundry. Fate was waiting for him behind the counter.

"I asked her to go to dinner with me. Go to the show? Nothing doing. I know then I was up against a regular girl. It took me a year to get her to go anywhere. Then I got her and my mother to come and see the play 'Slippery Jack' in 'A Romance of the Underworld,' and as soon as her mother saw me she said, 'My Lord, isn't he tough?' That was my make-up and the line of talk I had, see?"

"Two years ago I borrowed $500 from Paul Armstrong and bought the laundry. The girl with whom I made her manager, although I'm down on the stationery as manager, I believe I had to buy the place to get her. Now I've given it to her and she's going to run it, because I've got to be back in Los Angeles in three weeks to get at the moving picture game. I'm one of the movie actors now, a regular one with a regular role, too. Mae doesn't want to go West, so she'll stay here and run the laundry for the next six months. Then I'm coming back here for her."

"TAMMANY" AND BRIDE HE WON AS RESULT OF ROMANCE IN LAUNDRY.

BATHED FEET WITH WIDOW, SAYS BRIDE

Husband Then Drove Her From Home Nine Days After Marriage, She Charges.

ST. LOUIS, May 6.—Allegations that her husband of a few days hugged a widow, presented her engagement and wedding rings to the widow, and took a joint foot bath with the widow, are made in a divorce petition filed to-day by Mrs. Lillie E. Barth, against Walter E. Barth, a prosperous farmer living near Northport, Mich.

Mrs. Barth says she and Barth were married in St. Louis Dec. 10, 1912. At Traverse City, Mich., immediately after the wedding, Mrs. Barth says they met a widow who was occupying Barth's home near Northport. She says Barth hugged the widow. The three later went to Barth's home.

Seven days after the marriage, Mrs. Barth says, when she took off her rings and presented them to the widow. When Mrs. Barth objected, she said, her husband told her he loved the widow more than he did his wife.

Mrs. Barth asserts that, nine days after the ceremony, Barth threatened her with a poker and told her to leave his home.

BULLDOG PET BURIED IN $125 COFFIN, BUT WHERE IS A SECRET

Mrs. Crawford Carries Out Will of Brother, Who Left Cash for Canine.

Neighbors of Mrs. Caroline Crawford of No. 427 Market street, Paterson, N. J., are wondering to-day where her dog "Tuck" has been buried in his costly coffin, which was inscribed "Our Pet." The dog, which was known to everybody in the neighborhood, had a notable funeral yesterday. Then the casket was carried away in an automobile.

There is a general impression that the departed canine rests in a regular cemetery, but Mrs. Crawford will not gratify the general curiosity. When a reporter asked her the location of Tuck's grave she said: "He was buried on Long Island, but I won't say where."

Tuck was a sixteen-year-old bulldog. He had been the pet of Mrs. Crawford's brother, Henry Lantz, who died ten years ago, leaving his estate and the dog to his sister. In the will $125 was set aside to be used to buy a coffin when the dog should die.

On Saturday Tuck turned up his toes. Mrs. Crawford bought a coffin, paid the stipulated $125 for it and planned to bury Tuck next day on her own property. As the grave was being dug a Board of Health officer told Mrs. Crawford she was violating a city ordinance. Burial was postponed, and Mrs. Crawford arranged for a grave somewhere else.
